Private Letter from Manassas.

Bett. Res, Va., July 27, 1861.

Dear Sister: I write you a line, which will inform you that I am well. You base, doubtless, Dure Nieter: I write you're line, which will inform you that I am well. Tou have, doubtless, heard and read off the great battle at Manassas, on last Sanday, in which I participated from beginning to ending. It commenced about two miles to our right, and our Brigade was ordered to the left wing, which caused us to run double-quick about asseen miles. We finally reached the bottery, and after hard fighting for several hours we charged upon it, and then had a hard fight to hold the piece, but finally the Cavalry come to our aid and the Hessians dispersed in great disarder. (Grand sight to behold.) They pursued the enemy for several unles, catting them down on the right and on she left, taking, in sill, about 2000 prisoners that day and many more the next. Firing ceased about 50 clock, and the horrors of war were fully present d to our view, for the dead and the dying were as thick as hall-stones. Many wave the brave men that fell on the ill-fated old helds round and about Manassas Junction. Our General, Bee, Lieut. Col. Booth, of our Regiment, Anil. McCarty, of our Company, killed, and about one dozen of them wounded. Our Company suffered as much as any, for we were in the heat of battle, all occasionally retiring and again rellying. They had greatly the advantage of us in the position, as they picked it themselves. We buried all our dead that we could find, in boxessome we never found. Our army dug holes and buried the most of the enemy's dead-asome are yet unburied, just lying on the field as they fell. We captured in all about 60 cannon, 3000 prisoners, many horses, wagons, guns, ammunition, and many other things too todious to mention. I referyou to the newspapers, for I am at a loasto know how to describe the battle. Jeff Davis came in late in the terening and pursued the enemy with the horsemen, and asys it was the greatest victory you to the newspapers, for I am at a loss to know how to describe the battle. Jeff Davis came in late in the evening and pursued the enemy with the horsemen, and says it was the greatest victory on record. One shot cut my pants, another cut the corner of a little book in my breast pocket, neither of which did me any harm. The cannon balls, grape shot and bomb shells fell thick all around me. The way they whistled in the air is indescribable. When the battle was over I was so exhausted that if I had been pushed over I don't know that I could have risen again. But my life was miraculously preserved, and I felt grateful, which might be aftributable to the intercossion at the Thrence of Grace by kind sisters. But I must close. When I see you sgain I will stell you what I can't write. We are not allowed to mail letters here. I will send this by hand to where it can be malled. Cousin Eli Hoyle and Sam Hoyle were both in the battle and fought like mun. The former was slightly wounded in the shoulder. Dr. Hoyle is well. We are not allowed to the shoulder. Dr. Hoyle is well. We are not hattle ground now, in camps.

Your brother, Dr. Hoyle is well. We are you be not be the shoulder. Dr. Hoyle is well. We are you be not be shoulder. Dr. Hoyle is Well. We are you had nown in camps.

Affray in Greene County.

We learn that, at a Southern Rights Barbecue, at Evan's Cross Roads, in Greene county, an affray occurred, in which two Union men were shot, one of them, it is supposed fatally. The man supposed to be mortally wounded, was Isaac Smelzer, the captain of a Lincolnite Company. The name of the other not Company. The name of the other, not so dangerously injured, is Mike Ealey.— Knovville Register.

BLACK Republicans in Kentucky. On the day of the recent election in Kentucky, a number of negroes had gathered together in a village on the Ohio river, and were all engaged in a regular "Old Virginny" breakdown, when a Northern boat, the "Charley Bowen," came up and landed immediately in front of the darkies. The dancing was stopped; the old white-headed fiddler ordered the party to form a line of battle, and then party to form a line of battle, and then of her antagonist. gave the command for three cheers for "Massa Jeff and the white folks!" The cheering was repeated and vociferous, and the irrepressible Charley Bores left

From the Seat of War in Virginia. We have before us a private letter from a gentleman, residing at Warrenton, Va., a gentleman, residing at Warrenton, Va., from which we take the following extract. "Our troops are advancing as fast as they can be moved. They are now in four miles, fifty thousand of them, and pressing on. You may look out by the last of this or first of next week, for a big fight, or another foot race. My impression is, and I think you will find me correct, that our General will throw a large body of treops across the Potomac large body of troops across the Potomac at Leesburg and then march up to Wash-ington in the rese, bringing on an attack both in front and rear at the same time." Gen. Fremont's demand or request of the banks of St. Louis for a loan of $250,000 was politely declined by the banks. He concluded before attempting to take it by force to await further advices from Washington. In the meantime various parties were quietly withdrawing their deposits, and gold has advanced to ten per cent. premium.

A NORTHER SOLDIER'S OPINION, The Baltimore Repolican thus gives a Northern soldier's opinion of the Southern army:

He states that the accuracy of their artillerists was never excelled, and the discipline, equipment and efficiency of their cavalry never equalled by European armies. The horses seemed to partake of the spirit of their riders, and were discip-lined and drilled to the highest perfec-tion. He also avers that an attempt to conquer the South cannot be accomplished, and that an army such as Napoleon carried over the Alps, or in his campaign in Russia, would be inadequate to fue task of reaching Richmond.

The London Times has arrived at the nelusion that the war must terminate in Southern independence. That inde-pendence may not, even if it exist de facto, terminate the war. It is clear that the Times will advocate recognition, by Eng-land, at an early day. Advices received at Havana from Europe state that European Governments will probably soon recognize the Confederates.
